Rise in Japan's Military Budget Likely to Be Small

A new national budget will not be completed for several days, but indications are that military spending may rise at a slower rate than in any year since the Japanese eco-nomic boom began in the 1960s. The new budget is expected to be

Shultz Reports No Shift on Missile Talks

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

OSLO — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Thursday that his five hours of talks with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko of the Soviet Union were worthwhile but made "absolutely no movement" toward resuming negotiations for reducing nuclear missiles.

Speaking to reporters on his Air Force plane as he flew here for a brief official visit on his way to the United States from Stockholm, Mr. Shultz was more optimistic about the prospects for an early resumption of the East-West negotiations in Vienna on conventional force reductions in Central Europe.

In Stockholm, other Western ministers also said that as the result of talks they held with Soviet and East European officials they expected a date to be set soon, perhaps for mid-March. "We discussed arms control issues across the board," Mr. Shultz said. "the thrust of discussions varied from one to another." The Soviet Union last November quit the negotiations on limiting intermediate-range missiles in Europe because NATO began deploying the first of some 572 new U.S. missiles aimed at offsetting a per-ceived Soviet advantage in missiles in Europe. And last month, the Russians refused to set dates for resuming the strategic arms reduction talks in Geneva and the conventional force reduction talks in Mr. Gromyko, in a tough speech to the East-West conference on security that opened in Stockholm this week, repeated that the Russians would only return to the table for the intermediate-range missile talks if NATO removed the missiles already deployed. The allies have rejected this demand. When asked if he had made any

The U.S. position is that the Soviet Union left the negotiations without good reason and should not be rewarded simply for agreeing to negotiate again. Mr. Shultz sought to leave the impression that the talks with Mr. Gromyko were serious and valuable, but he refused to describe the meeting in anything but the most cautious and limited terms. The atmosphere was a business-like one," he said, "We had very strong discussions across a full range of issues and in a straightforward businesslike atmosphere." During a five-hour stopover in Oslo. Mr. Shultz met with Foreign Minister Svenn Stray and other officials and had lunch with Norway's king, Olav V.

At a press conference before leaving Oslo, Mr. Shultz said that he and Mr. Gromyko had not discussed the elections in the United States, when a questioner asked if the Russians expected Mr. Reagan to be re-elected.

He also said that he had raised human rights concerns with Mr. Gromyko, but he refused to say if he had asked specifically about Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat who was arrested in Hungary in 1945 by the Russians after he had helped rescue thousands of Hungarian Jews. BEIRUT - Lebanon's national airline, whose pilots have a reputation for getting passengers to Beirut in all but the most perilous of times, is on the verge of bankruptcy after a year of devastating losses.

Salim Salaam, the 61-year-old chairman and president of the line, Middle East Airlines, says the only people flying to Lebanon these days are those who have no choice. And for nearly two months last year even those passengers mainly Lebanese, some foreign journalists and a handful of businessmen — were unable to fly because the war had forced the government to close the airport.

"You don't make money when the airport is closed," Mr. Salaam said. "You only spend money on fixed costs and salaries." MEA, which is partly owned by the Lebanese government, had expected 1983 to be a year of growth, We thought that with a new presidential regime here and people tired after years of war, the situation would improve rapidly," he said. "But that didn't happen. In fact, he said, passenger loads dropped 40 percent and the airline went $54.6 million into the red in a record bad year. That brought total losses for the company since the start of the fighting nine years ago to a little more than $100 million. "People are afraid to come to Lebanon," Mr. Salaam said, "and people, even the Lebanese, are alraid to leave. They are sticking to

But the wife doesn't like it. He leaves on a business trip, and she gets to thinking about it. Finally she calls us up and says, 'Get this thing out of here.' "

Sometimes the shells are dangerous and sometimes not. "But people are crazy," Sergeant First Class Maurice Valentine said. "We had a call like that not long ago where a woman called us up to come get a cannonball out of her backyard. It turned out it wasn't a cannonball at all, but one of those old iron balls from a prison-gang ball and chain. But her husband and son had thought it was an explosive shell. And they'd been shot-putting with it in the backyard." And then there are the war-relic hoarders, Sergeant Clark said, who smuggled back from Vietnam or Korea or some World War II bat-

Often, he said, the second bomb was contained in a nearby food vendor's pushcart. He remembers disarming one cart packed with about 200 pounds (90 kilograms) of explosive, reaching in carefully to crimp a slow-burning fuse. Bombs in the United States, while usually smaller, are more complex, he said. The age of discount-store electronics has replaced the ticking time bomb with solid-state bombs that are simple, more compact and, according to Sergeant Clark, "extremely reliable." "It used to be that if you had a 10-minute warning, you could get in there and disarm the bomb," he said. "Now you rarely have that much, and there's not a tremendous amount you can do very rap-

"The old-style alarm-clock bombs were necessarily limited to a 12-hour time frame. Now, with digital timers, you can set them days and weeks and in some cases even months and years ahead."

The result, Sergeant Clark and his colleagues say, is that if someone sets a bomb and really wants it to go off, it usually does.

The Fort McNair team has coun-always been in turmoil, that Lebanon is not viable. Yet that is not history.

Lebanon as a modern political and danger that the murder of yet another American might be seen as just so much more savagery. But the killing of Malcolm Kerr, president of the American University of Beirut, is a particularly barbaric challenge. Far from qualifying as a fanatic's "nationalist" gesture, it is a grave assault on civilization everywhere.

From its founding by Protestant missionaries in 1866, the American University has played a vital role in the political rebirth of the Middle East. Its first president, Daniel Bliss, eloquently defined its inclusive character: "This college is for all conditions and classes of men without regard to color, nationality, race or religion. A man white, black or yellow; Christian, Jew. Mohammedan or heathen, may enter and enjoy all the advantages of this institution ... and go out believing in one God, in many Gods, or in no God."

Aided by American philanthropy, the university has kept its doors open under Ottoman

Its graduates span the spectrum of Mideast leadership. Its faculty has persistently and passionately pleaded for American understanding of the region's grievances.

In 1982, the university's acting president was abducted and held for a year by pro-Iranian terrorists. It took Syrian intervention to free him. His successor has apparently been slain by Islamic Jihad, the same nebulous gang that claims responsibility for the killing of 241 American marines and 58 French troops earlier this year and the recent kidnapping of Saudi Arabia's consul in Beirut.

Whoever killed Dr. Kerr had larger purposes than driving out the marines. The aim was to banish reason, learning and tolerance. The best reprisal is to find the means to keep

A Not Un-Fair Tax Plan

One issue that every politician, or almost every politician, knows must be addressed in 1985, if not in 1984, is how U.S. taxes should be raised to reduce the federal deficit. No one is willing to go after the delicit this year so long as President Reagan is unwilling to do so and unless some crisis of confidence forces action, as it did in 1982. But almost everyone, maybe even including Mr. Reagan, knows that something will have to be done.

If taxes are going to be raised, how they are raised becomes the most legitimate of political issues. President Reagan and his Republican comrades have been most unilluminating on how they would go about doing that. So long as Mr. Reagan coyly insists that taxes do not need to go up, few Republicans are going to venture any specifics.

The Democrats - oddly, for a party out of power - seem to be getting more specific. Some of their presidential candidates have advanced tax-increase plans of varying speci-ficity. And the "Democratic blueprint" released recently by the House Democratic Caucus and signed as well by a number of prominent national Democrats comes down foursquare for what it calls the "Fair Tax."

The idea is to simplify the tax code by having just a few different tax rates, lower than today's, with the lowest bracket covering most taxpayers, and abolishing most of the deductions and loopholes that now clutter the Internal Revenue Code. The loopholes with the largest constituencies would be retained, notably the charitable and mortgage-interest deductions. That detracts from the purity of the proposal but vastly enhances its political feasibility. "There is simply no way to repair the present code," say the Democrats, and so they have come up with a plan less progressive than the income tax started off being but more progressive than the value-added tax some Republicans are rumored to favor. Where these Democrats go, the presidential candidates may follow. This proposal answers one of their political imperatives: They must come up with a macroeconomic policy different from Reagan plans and from past Democratic plans, all of which, they must argue, have failed. Just promising to close the deficit is not enough; how many voters' hearts pound when they hear Democrats make that promise? Nor is the phrase "industrial policy" doing for the Democrats what many strategists and would-be economic advisers hoped. The Democratic blueprint mentions in passing the need for government to work together with business, but its specific proposals are either airy (such as an Economic Cooperation Council) or unsurprising (beef up the infrastructure).

What will surprise some is that this electionyear document is a work of substance. It gives important clues to what the Democrats would do in power, and on taxes it advances the political debate to a level of specificity which, unfortunately, Mr. Reagan and his party in power have yet to match.

Those who rush to condemn Mr. Reagan for electioneering, insincerity, and worse, over his shift in policy toward Moscow should do well to remember that the Soviet leader has not been in his office for a full five months.

It may well be that Mr. Reagan has backed the [Soviet] bear into a corner over the past three years. His offer of dialogue enables it to shuffle out with a little dignity.

- The Daily Telegraph (London).

Apparently, with the election coming up and all the arms talks in recess, President Reagan fears he has carried insult too far and that a verbal armistice will bring the Russians hastening to consider "common interests" and arms reductions. It is all very naive.

Sharp talk did not create the underlying tensions in the relationship, and sweet talk will not undo them. It is unlikely that either insult or flattery has ever had the slightest influence on Soviet policy or behavior.

- Edwin Yoder Jr. in The Washington Post.

Reagan and the Vatican President Reagan has been roundly criticized by liberal and conservative Protestants and Jews for establishing full diplomatic ries with the Vatican. But it is a sensible step

There are substantial differences between the Vatican and the headquarters of other world religions. The sheer size and near universality of the Catholic Church is one. Secondly, the Vatican is a political entity as well as a religous one. While the city-state of the Vatican is tiny, it once occupied a much larger territory that was ceded to Italy. As a result, 106 nations in addition to the United States have formal diplomatic relations with the Holy See. Indeed, several Communist countries have ambassadors in Rome.

Why? Certainly, the tiny Vatican city-state is not a nation in any significant sense. But we have seen a generation of popes who have been preeminent world leaders and spokesmen for world peace. Certainly, no other world leader communicates with the many peoples of the world as effectively as Pope John Paul II.

Syria Holds All the Cards

American efforts to discover greater flexibility and moderation in Syria's position on Lebanon have failed. Donald H. Rumsfeld. the special U.S. envoy, has reported not only no success but also a stiffening in Syria's line. Damascus has clearly calculated that it can get what it wants in Lebanon without the bother of making any substantial concessions, and that indeed its interests will be furthered by showing just how uncompromising it can be. Syria is not only seeking to assure itself a position of strong influence or even domi-nance in Lebanon. It also perceives the opportunity for added political benefits by demonstrating that it faced down the United States. This is the bitter pill that it is holding out to Washington, Damascus knows that President Reagan, in an election year, cannot afford to keep the marines at their thankless and onerous task in Beirut much longer. Damascus is also aware of the popular, political and now even military pressures building in Israel to end what has become a costly and unreward-

Syria is not going to make it easy for the United States to call it quits in Lebanon. The harsh facts have to be faced. Syria holds all the high cards. No new deal can be expected. It is time for the United States to throw in its hand and walk away from the table.

LONDON — A visit paid to the scene of the great bogslide at Ballygar, County Galway, revealed the fact that the catastrophe was on a much greater scale. The entire face of the district has been altered, well-defined rivers and roads have disappeared, and landmarks familiar to the peasantry for a lifetime have been submerged. Over a hundred acres of land that were previously under grass are now covered with at least 12 feet of oozing bog. The bog was moving at the rate of about five miles an hour. The greatest sympathy is expressed for the poor sufferers, whose loss is not confined to their houses and stock, for the land now covered by the bog, which slowly but surely is piling up, is gone forever.

The American Negotiator's View of the Geneva Talks

By Paul H. Nitze

The writer, the U.S. negotiator in the suspended talks in Geneva on intermediate-range nuclear missiles, is responding to a Jan. 13 article by Yuli Kvitsinsky, the Soviet Union's chief negotiator in the talks.

By that time, both sides pretty thoroughly understood each other's positions and the issues dividing them. Ambassador Yuli Kvitsinsky had proved himself during these first two rounds to be sharp and intelligent, an accomplished diplomat able to rise above the deadening hand of the Soviet bureaucratic process. When he wishes, he can be charming. His focus is entirely political. The truth or falsity of any statement is only of secondary interest to him. After a period of time, I came to think I could generally, though not always, sort the true from the false in what he said. In July 1982, Mr. Kvitsinsky and I agreed to attempt to develop a complete package of reciprocal concessions that, if accepted by both governments, would resolve all the principal outstanding issues. This would be done without commitment by either government. The result was the "walk in the woods" formula that essentially would have restricted each side to no more than 75 missile launchers and precluded deployment of U.S. Pershing-2 missiles in the European area, and would have frozen Soviet launchers at 90 in Soviet Asia.

I heard nothing from the Soviet side during the summer break. Then, in September 1982, in a private meeting. Mr. Kvitsinsky handed me a copy of his instructions flatly rejecting all the principles on which the "walk in the woods" formula was based. During the following year, the talks were largely stalemated.

During the early summer of 1983. Mr. Kvitsinsky told me that he considered the round beginning in September to be the one in which the "end game" would be played out. He told me that during the summer recess he would be working on his in structions for that "end game."

The "end game" began Sept. 22 with President Reagan's offering substantial concessions on limiting air-craft; on including, in effect, a sub-ceiling on U.S. intermediate-range missiles in Europe within a global ceiling on such missiles; and on allocating reductions between Pershing-2s and cruise missiles. The Oct. 27 edition of Pravda carried an interview with Ynri V. Andropov offering to reduce Soviet SS-20 deployments in Europe to 140, to halt further SS-20 deployments in the Far East upon the entry into force of an agreement limiting intermediate range missiles in Europe, and to change Moscow's proposal on limiting aircraft to something not too far from Mr. Reagan's aircraft proposal

Mr. Keitsinsky fold me about the Andropov interview at a dinner party Oct. 26. Later that evening he surprised me by saying. Why den't you propose equal reductions? I reminded him that a year earlier he head of the saying and the saying are surprised me by saying. Why den't you propose equal reductions? I reminded him that a year earlier he head of the saying are surprised. ed him that a year carifer, he had told me this idea was macceptable to Moscow. He then said his present idea was daily would bring Soviet SS-20 lammakers in Europe down to 120, and, more importantly. provide a way around the issue of compensation for British and French systems. Some days later, I asked him

Moscow would accept the proposal Mr. Kvitsinsky, curiously, has since characterized that proposal as one that I had initiated.

Of course, this formulation perpetnated the Soviet insistence on retaining a monopoly of intermediaterange missiles against zero for the NATO alliance, a position we have always rejected. So, I told him I could not imagine that Washington would accept this, but that I would immediately tell Washington what he had said I did. Washington informed our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies. On Nov. 17, the Soviet Embas-sy in Bonn delivered a note to the West German government saying that I — not the Russians — had proposed reductions to about 120 missiles on the Soviet side and zero on the American side and that Wash-

to other NATO governments. The episode had a peculiar Byzantine character that is alien to serious diplomacy. There appear to have been two purposes to these machinations. The first was to permit Moscow to deny, if necessary, that it had abandoned what has been a cornerstone of its propaganda campaign in Europe — insistence on including British and French nuclear forces in first and central issue was that of the balance of intermediate-range missile deployments in Europe between the sides. The second was the question of compensation for British and French submarine-launched ballistic missile systems - the Soviet rationale for a wholly one-sided outcome on the first issue. The third was the question of Soviet INF deployments in Soviet Asia. The fourth was Soviet insistence on radical limits in Europe on American aircraft capable of carrying nuclear and nonnuclear weapons, limits that would have emasculated the U.S. contribution to the conven-

Buying Front-Row Seats in the Vatican

ROME - President Reagan's decision last week to nominate William A. Wilson as the first U.S. ambassador to the Vatican is an event of some historical interest, but dubious utility. Actually, the young United States enjoyed diplomatic relations with the Papal States, meaning Rome and Latium, which were governed by the pope and the Roman Curia until Garibaldi & Co. entered Rome in 1870 as part of their campaign to unify the Italian nation. Rome's British and American colonies were quite large at that time, though their situation was constrained. The Anglo-American residents held separate church services in private homes, and Protestants could only be buried outside the city walls — as was the poet John Keats. The papal gendarmes knew what was going among the Protestants on Sunday mornings, since they maintained the Napoleonic tradition of employing con-cierges as police informers. In 1867, a rumor — never sub-stantiated — had reached Washington that the pope was going to force the Protestants to hold their church services outside the city walls. The United States was then in the grip of one of those periodic spasms of nativist anti-Catholicism that were endemic to 19th-century America, and Congress readily passed a statute forbidding the use of federal funds to maintain relations with the Papal States, So things remained until 1929, when Benito Mussolini's treaty with Pius XI created the modern sovereign state of Vatican City in the heart of Rome. The pope again had a realm to reign over, and a court for courtiers to attend.

Also in attendance was a series of personal presidential representaives, the most recent of whom is Mr. Wilson, a convert to Catholicism and member of Mr. Reagan's kitchen cabinet. You may ask what, in heaven's name, do the more than 100 ambassadors now accredited to the Vatican do? They show their country's flag, if they are to attend formal Vatican ceremonies, they are expected to wear white ties and tails — even at 10 A.M. — or "national uniforms," which permits the occasional kilt or leopard-skin robe. Wives must wear only black. Most of these ambassadors do a lot of flying about: They are likely to be nomination, the United States their country's ambassador to both the Vatican and another country, such as Switzerland or Malta. One diplomat, until recently accredited to the Vatican, said that his dispatches were similar to those filed from other posts "but on a dinkier scale." He read the Vatican and Italian press, "and I listen to gossip, of which there is an awful lot, just as there is in any despotic, albeit benevolent, regime.

None of those above essential services can be rendered to U.S. citizens by the proposed coming U.S. Embassy to the Holy Sec. Even tickets for a papal audience, once a chore for visitors to obtain, now can be had from one's local bishop before leaving home.

But according to Mr. Wilson's deputy, Donald Plenty, one of the major benefits to the United States of his chief's elevation will be "in seating." He explains that when the pope is presiding over a religious service or a diplomatic reception, the ambassadors accredited to the Vatican get the best seats. Mr. Wilson's seat is at the back.

I write in hearty agreement with Brenda Maddox's opinion, "A Reply: No, Women Aren't Better Off in America" (IHT, Jan. 13). In our con-tinuing struggle for equality, Ameri-can women have climbed the ladder into the same trap as their male counterparts - being identified by what we do and not what we are.

After living for three years in Europe, I have found, as Ms. Maddox has, that hardly anyone, male or fe-male, asks what one "does." This is a pleasant change from most American social gatherings. No one here really cares what I do. If I am able to speak reasonably intelligently on a variety of subjects, I will be listened to courteously and my opinions will be respected. This may not be the equality most women seek, but it is far more as "the main South African resispleasant than ruining everyone's dinner by arguing across the table about the failure or success of the women's liberation movement.

On Nov. 17, the Sovietic the sake of copyright, there can't be a remake of a film for 20 years. Too wast German government the sake of copyright, there can't be a remake of a film for 20 years. Too bad, there's not one way to read Proust, that's for sure."

Getting just the one version done has been hard enough. The French producer Nicole Stephane, who acquired the rights from Proust's niece in 1962, was in despair until Schlöndorff said yes after projects with Visconti, Losey and Peter Brook had fallen through and after most of the leading French directors had turned her down.

"For some reason French directors either respect or despise literature so much that they would rather take any old American crime story and turn it into a film." Schlöndorff says.

"My best friends, like Louis Malle and Bertrand Tavernier, kept saying I was completely nuts to get into it. They never resented it when I made films of Boll or Grass, but Proust — you're not supposed to touch him, it's some sort of national thing here."

Nicole Stephane, who sold her rights to the French and German backers in order to get the film produced, agrees. "One mustn't touch Proust although one can slice Stendhal or Victor Hugo to bits."

Schlöndorff points out that there is one good reason why only a foreigner would dare take on Proust: "A French director who did it and failed could not walk through Paris any more, whereas a foreigner could Schlöndorff was born in Wiesbaden in 1939 and commutes between Munich and Pigalle, where he lives opposite the writer Jean-Claude Carrière, a chum since the days of Louis Malle's "Viva Maria," on which Schlöndorff, who went to the IDHEC film school in Paris, was an assistant. Carrière wrote the Proust script along with Marie-Hélène Estienne and Peter Brook, who contributed the crucial idea of having the action take place in one day. Schlöndorff did the final adaptation.

Schlöndorff's greatest success was his Oscar-winning adaptation of the Günter Grass novel "The Tin Drum." He also has brought works by Robert Musil, Marguerite Yourcenar and Heinrich Böll to the screen, He says he began filming fiction by chance. "But probably after so many years, you can't call it chance any more. I feel most stimulated by books, books that I take up again and again, not the other ones that you just read and forget. It's very exciting to work with a good text, that's the first thing. Sometimes you come up with a result and sometimes not, but the more demanding a text is, the better for you - it's just a question of labor, the more you look for a solution the more chance you have to come up with something interesting."

His next film will have an original script and will be a satire on an East-West disarmament conference in Switzerland. In the hope of finding the secret of 1930s comedy, he asked the late Walter Reisch, who wrote "Ninotchka," to do a draft. "The problem with comedy is you really need a good script," he says. "With literature you can invent a lot of things dwine the filming but in comedy it but to a girl before." of things during the filming, but in comedy it has to exist before."

Schlöndorff says the French consider him very German and the Germans consider him not entirely German, while he sees himself more like Woody Allen's Zelig. Known to be difficult on the set, he is friendly and bright over tea: It is, he says, the first time he has spoken in a relaxed and detached fashion about the Proust film. It is probably a question of timing: The moment of truth, when the film is finally shot, is over, and the moment of untruth, when the finished product is hyped, has not yet

This is the editing time when the footage is assembled and the sound track added; a time when dream and reality confront each other and when thousands of disparate pieces fall into place, exactly how Schlöndorff cannot explain.

"What is the magic that holds Proust together? There is no story, there are no conflicts, no devices. Through a poetry and magic and inner flow he passes from one time to another. The shooting was easy, now when you're putting the pieces together, you have to find that inner flow. In 'The Tin Drum' and 'The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum' it was all speed and contrast. This is like a puzzle done in fractions of a second because you don't have a motor that is pushing it along."

Shooting, says Schlöndorff, is a time of passion. "You hate an actor, you love a dress. Editing is mainly to preserve what you have, to

Volker Schlöndorff with extras on the set of "Swann in Love."

You don't always know what you have. Working with his editor, Schlöndorff has found himself using rejected takes or giving up cherished ideas, such as the premise that Swann is really very active, a seducer. "I finally gave in," he says. "Swann is a passive character, he is suffering but he never does anything about it. He is not like a Latin lover

"It won't be a complicated editing, it should be very simple and smooth. As one might expect, it will insist more on the moments when nothing is happening rather than create action. It is just not possible to turn Proust into an action storyteller," Schlöndorff adds, laughing. "I tried, it doesn't work."

To Schlöndorff the film is not about love or jealousy but about futility, the sort of downbeat statement that makes possible exhibitors shrink.

"Yes," he says, "but I don't mean to sell it. It can sell itself. Sometimes in other films one doesn't say these things in interviews, you censor yourself. But I think this is a demanding film and people are willing to go for it or not. I don't mean that it is difficult because it is in no way intellectual. It is completely sensual, there's not much dialogue. It is more lyrical and the music has an important part.

"I hope it doesn't look too much like a costume piece. You can feel that people are wearing the costumes of a certain period but the film is not a period piece. It is more as if it were unreal, it has something of a dream about it. Because we were able to do it entirely on location. Swann and Odette are more like ghosts haunting these Paris stones. That sounds even more off-putting," he adds, "but it's probably the best thing

His cast features Alain Delon as Charlus, Jeremy Irons as Swann and Ornella Muti as Oderte. "I don't really like the mishmash of actors. Normally Proust should be an entirely French cast and it was not for commercial reasons that I decided on Ornella and Jeremy. It's a complete contradiction of my own principle; I just thought they were the best fitted for it."

The Italian Muti, previously known as a sex kitten, is said to be an excellent surprise. "You can see what you want in her," Schlöndorff says, "sometimes this incredible sensuality, sometimes a great melancholy. She changes throughout the film all the time so that, like Swann we never know what to think of her."

The film is set in 1885 with its angular, rather perverse fashions Schlöndorff thinks it could be set today. "I know so many Swanns who are running through La Coupole and other places looking for this or that lady they are infatuated with, and then always these facades and these French salons with everyone talking and if somebody is having an emotion you are considered a nuisance. You are not supposed in French society to have an emotion, much less show it." 'Swann in Love" was shot in only 43 days. The long wait in making it, the problems of financing all seem now a necessary part of the process.

"In a way I think the difficulties were well-deserved," Schlöndorff says. "I mean you can't get away with Proust that easily, you know -shoot it and put it together and take your money and run. You know it's more difficult than that."

Dance and Music: An Uneasy Alliance

by Jack Anderson

EW YORK - Let's ponder three statements. First, there is George Balanchine's description of music as a "floor for dancing." The second comes from an essay that the late Edwin Denby wrote in 1945 in which he foresaw a new dance classicism that would stir audiences "by the act of dancing and not, as the fashion was from 1910 to 1940, by opposing to that act obstacles of various kinds of mimicry." The third remark was made by Hugo Fiorato, one of the New York City Ballet's conductors, a meeting of the Dance Critics' Association. Bal-anchine, said Fiorato, did not "just put movements on top of a score, he added a new dimension to it." Today, in both ballet and modern dance, many "obstacles" of plot, symbolism and dramatic pantomime have been swept away and a choreographic work may consist of nothing but dancing to music. Yet, often, such works are facile and pointless. Music - or, to put it more exactly, a certain approach to music may now constitute a new obstacle to choreographic expression

There are commentators who praise works that consist solely of steps to music as examples of "pure dance." But there are times when some things can be so pure as to be colorless or tasteless. At their simplest, pure-dance compo-sitions are little more than displays of energy. In more sophisticated examples of the form, a dance composition offers a visual and kinetic equivalent of a musical composition as trans-lated into some balletic or modern-dance technique. But seldom does this choreography add new dimensions to a score; it simply puts choreographic linoleum on the floor for danc-

Although there exist a few choreographers who, like John Neumeier, appear to believe that choosing monumental pieces of music will bring about monumental choreography, most choreographers are modest and avoid grandiose symphonies and oratorios. Yet their tact may result in a work as simultaneously wellcrafted and dismaying as Helgi Tomasson's "Ballet d'Isoline," to music by André Messager, for the New York City Ballet, a piece that is little more than pretty steps to pretty tunes. Such a ballet may be "pure." Yet it also seems inconsequential.

Although they may exploit dancers' technical skills, choreographers are sometimes sur-prisingly hesitant to offer distinctively personal interpretations of musical scores. Yet, presumably, the scores they choose must mean something important to them. And since no piece of music inevitably requires choreography - music being a self-sufficient art - if choreographers have nothing interesting to say about a piece of music, they might as well leave it unchoreographed.

It is worth noting that, in public statements, Balanchine would disdain fancy interpretations of his ballets and speak as if choreography simply involved setting appropriate steps to a piece of music. But it would be foolish to take his remarks too literally. Balanchine's ballets constitute a remarkable set of choreographic visions, raptures, ordeals, quests and exaltations. Balanchine even altered music to suit his own expressive purposes. Thus he lopped off the first movement of Mendelssohn's score for "Scotch" Symphony and reversed the order of the last two movements of "Serenade," even though the reversal destroys the formal symmetry of Tchaikovsky's composition. However, that same reversal brings the ballet to an achingly beautiful conclusion.

Music, traditionally the choreographer's ally, is in danger of becoming the choreographer's master and what was initially a liberating classicism may be turning into a stultifying academicism. To prevent this from happening. choreographers should be encouraged to work directly with musical collaborators so that the creative process can be a mutually rewarding dialogue between dedicated artists.

Balanchine may have insisted upon notions of aesthetic impersonality so that he could be free to fill his works with any personal feelings he wished without fearing that viewers would automatically regard each new ballet as a choreographic confession or gossip column. In so doing he resembles T.S. Eliot, whose critical theories scorned mere self-expression, but whose poetry concerned deeply personal moral and religious struggles. What is important in both Balanchine and Eliot is not the letter of their theories, but the spiritual fire that transfigures their works. In addition to avoiding personal interpretations of music, choreographers can treat music too reverently. When Peter Martins began choreographing a work to Rossini chamber music for the New York City Ballet, he may have realized that one piece of music was insuffi-cient for a baller on the scale that he wished. Therefore, he utilized two pieces and the result was "Rossini Quartets." But the two pieces he chose are so similar as to cancel each other out when one immediately follows the other. Martins tried hard to make "Rossini Quartets" interesting to look at, but it became dull to listen to. The late John Cranko ran into a comparable problem when he yoked two Bach concertos together for his "Brandenburg Nos. 2 and 4" for the Royal Ballet. In contrast, in his "Esplanade," to Bach, and his "Aureole" and "Airs," to Handel, Paul Taylor takes individual movements from several different concertos and arranges them in a new order. This may horrify pedants. Yet the musical rearrangements make possible some unusually inventive choreography. These days, abstraction is fashionable and no choreographer wishes to get mired in allegory or snarled in subplots. Even so, choreographers often appear to be unusually ill at ease when they use music that was either written for some specific theatrical purpose or given programmatic significance by its composer. If the taste of our time may make choreographers avoid explicitly programmatic dances, their respect for music may make them feel that they must indicate their awareness of a score's program, if it originally had one. However, the choreographic results may be too pallid to be satisfactory as dance-drama, yet too annoying-ly allusive to allow one to regard the work solely as an abstraction.

For instance, there's Joseph Duell's "La Creation du Monde," for the New York City Ballet. Milhand wrote this score for a 1923 ballet about African mythology. Duell had no desire to imitate that scenario. Yet, apparently, he felt he ought to acknowledge that he was familiar with the score's history. So his ballet does contain moments suggesting tribal rituals. Unfortunately, they are introduced so reticently that they have little impact.

Music, traditionally the choreographer's ally, is in danger of becoming the choreographer's master and what was initially a liberating classicism may be turning into a stultifying academicism. To prevent this from happening, choreographers should be encouraged to work directly with musical collaborators so that the creative process can be a mutually rewarding dialogue between dedicated artists. If nothing else, commissioned scores may free choreographers from the constant necessity of having to tailor dances to the structural demands of such traditional forms as the sonata or concerto.

The dance arranger - someone who adapts another composer's music for dancing - can also be of help. A sensitive arranger can make existing pieces of music sound as if they had been especially composed for dancing. Thus Simon Sadoff's arrangement of Purcell intensifies the power of Jose Limon's "The Moor's Pavane." And certain arranged dance scores are so attractive that they are even occasionally heard in concert: among them, William Wal-ton's arrangement of Bach for Frederick Ashton's "The Wise Virgins," Vincenzo Tommasi-ni's arrangement of Scarlatti for Léonide Massine's "The Good-Humored Ladies" and Manuel Rosenthal's arrangement of Offenbach for Massine's "Gaite Parisienne."

Finally, it should not be forgotten that "pure dance" is only one of many valid forms of dance and that whenever any single form becomes stultified, it may be time to reinvestigate the possibilities of another. Of course, the only real solution to choreographic problems is choreographic imagination. But if all choreographers possessed that in abundance, no one would need to worry about how they used

ELSINKI - On the landing between the first and second floors of the Mannerbeim Museum in Helsinki, a visitor hearkens to the muffled clip-clop of ... could it be a herd of reindeer from a nearby forest? The sound deepens to a steady rumble until the felt-slippered feet of a sturdy group of elderly Finnish women comes into view, maybe 50 of them, paying homage to the man they revere as the father of Finland: Field Marshal Carl Gustav Manner-

For Finland, a country of 5 million, the Mannerheim Museum is the closest thing there is to a national shrine: for a visitor, his Helsinki home provides a capsule history of what is surely one of Europe's least approached and most approachable peoples: the Finns.

Situated in a far northern corner of the continent, with a population speaking a lan-guage that cannot be divined by knowledge of cognates in any major Indo-European lan-guage, Finland would, by most definitions in the lower latitudes, he remote. To foreigners the Finns present themselves as an outdoors people who make the most of a harsh climate. practice rough individualism, keep clean with their saunas, excel at sports, crafts and textiles, pay their debts on time and live with admirable self-assurance within growling distance of the great Russian bear.

Visitors can easily absorb themselves in the Finnish delights of cross-country skiing, sailing in a seemingly endless archipelago, hiking the mossy forest trails and, in summer, playing tennis or dancing under the midnight sun.

But to find out who the Funs are and whence they emerged, a little history helps, and it can be acquired pleasurably by visiting three of Helsinki's museums, all of which provide guidebooks, guides and exhibition case labels employing English.

To begin with: the museum of Mannerheim, whose titles - regent, field marshal and president -- convey only a whisper of the man's accomplishments. A quintessential European, he was born in 1867 of Finnish-Swedish-Dutch ancestry, became a cavalry officer in the imperial Russian army and, after distinguished combat service in the Russian-Japanese War and World War I, led the troops that made possible the creation of an independent Finnish republic in 1919. As if that were not enough, in his 70s he commanded the Finnish armies that stood off the Soviets in two epic struggles during World War II and then be-came Finland's first postwar president.

Of Swedish background and serving the Russian czar, to emerge as Finland's greatest patriot - confusing? Perhaps not, if one recalls that George Washington served the Brit-ish crown until 1776 or that, in our own time, Tito fought for the Austro-Hungarian emperor before becoming the father of Communist Yu-

Were it for the martial objects alone, the collection would suffice as remarkable, but there is more, for Mannerheim was an inspired collector and avid reader; his shelves contain several thousand books in English, German. Russian, French and Swedish, languages in which he was fluent.

found time to pursue a deep interest in ethnography. It was the byproduct of an assignment from the Russian general staff in 1906 to scout the northwestern frontier territories of China on a journey that took him 8.750 miles (about 14,200 kilometers) on horseback over the next two years, from Turkestan to Beijing, during which he wore out all eight of his original Cossack companions. Along the way he took several thousand photographs, some of which can be seen on the museum's slide projector. His intelligence task was to assess the potential of China's forces a year after the Japanese, in beating the Russians, had shocked the world by becoming the first Asian nation to defeat a Caucasian power. It was a time when European monarchs and their propagandists were conjuring up the Yellow Peril. Mannerheim returned with many photographs of Asian troops in training, which must have satisfied his Russian superiors, and just as many of priests and princesses and mud-walled villages. He also returned with a trove of oriental valuables: carpets, silk screens, gold tile from the grand mosque of Samarkand and carved Tibetan Buddhas. It is one of the greatest collections of Asian art in all Europe.

One object above all others holds a magnetic fascination for Finns: a painting of white-camouflaged Finnish ski troops on their bellies in the snow of a deep forest, rifles at the ready. It was done more than 80 years ago by Akseli Gallen-Kallela in response to a repressive Russian edict and, for all its plainness, was a prophecy of how the Finns would successfully defend themselves against the Soviet jugger-nant 40 years later, in 1939. It was given in the 1920s to Mannerheim, who would command those defenders.

Finns like to tell Mannerheim stories, perhaps as fondly as Americans tell stories about George Washington, true or apocryphal. Here is one: During World War II a Wehrmacht general was invited to dine at the field marshal's table. A chain-smoker, the German looked in vain for an ashtray, not knowing that the Mannerheim manner was to permit smoking only after coffee and brandy had been served. "May one smoke?" the Wehrmacht officer nervously inquired while the meal was still under way. "I don't know," Mannerheim replied coolly. "It's never happened before."

Mannerheim's soldiers in the Finnish for-ests preserved the nation's independence at a cost of 80,000 lives. In the struggle they killed more than a million Soviet troops.
You can hear the soldiers' cheerful songs from recordings played in a reproduction of a windowless front-line log bunker from the Winter War in the Military Museum of the Finnish Defense Forces. They are the songs of Jermu, (pronounced YERR-moo), the tough Finnish equivalent of GI Joe: foxtrots, a tango, marches and waltzes. The fragrance of pine

In a country that practices neutrality as much as it has preached it for the last four decades, it is astonishing to encounter these martial memories, the more so in the peaceable atmosphere of the capital, where few uniforms are in evidence. Yet Finns seem to relish stories of military prowess. One of the hit records of four years ago was "Hakkaa Paale" or, roughly, "Make Hash of Them!" — a battle cry of the Finnish dragoons serving in the Royal Swedish Army of the Thirty Years' War. It may even be the etymological ancestor of a German expression for hash. Hackeneter, since the Germans first heard it from charging Finnish cavalrymen in the battle of Lützen in 1632.

On my arrival in Finland, my host, Matti Kohva, a journalist, marched up and down in his apartment to the battle tunes that have become known as "Hakkaa Paale" and then sang along with them. Several years ago Kohva had accompanied some Finnish war veterans to the Soviet Karelian capital of Petrozavodsk; which their battalion had captured, to the square where they had happily dynamited a huge statue of Stalin," to the ruins of a distillery where "5,000 Finns liberated 10,000 liters vodka" and to the monument to what a Russian guide described as "18 of our brave boys killed in a sneak attack by White Finnish Mannerheim Fascists — we didn't know who."

Kohva recalled that one of the visiting veter-ans went into a mock crouch as if holding a submachine gun. "I did it!" he shouted, sarcastically. "Rat-tat-tat-tat!" The guide went pale

Such old-boy hijinks aside, the Military Museum, with displays from its collection of 60,000 items in the brick barracks of the former First Rifle Battalion of Uusimaa, provides an easily absorbed short tour through Finnish history, from the 600 or so years of Swedish rule through the period as a grand duchy of Russia from 1809 to 1917 and into indepen-

Most compelling for contemporaries is the exhibition relating to World War II, which, along with the Jermu bunker, is highlighted by what must be some of the most dramatic blackand-white battlefield photographs ever made. A visitor is told that combat photography had been a top priority of the Finnish armed forces. The results are there, razor sharp and somber: white snow and muzzle flashes, gray faces of infantrymen and nurses and flame-blackened trees and buildings.

Nor is any animosity toward Finland's foes evident. For example, the Military Museum displayed an exhibition of Masterpieces of Russian Armorers from Leningrad's Hermitage collection for four months earlier this year.
The Finns appear to look upon the Russians as worthy adversaries, and vice versa, to judge from Russian comments in the visitors book.

After nearly 40 years of peace in Europe, even if it is a heavily armed peace, it may come as something of an affront for the visitor to study history, so to speak, through the barrel of a gun or down the edge of a saber. For the Finns, however, who took shape as a nation rather late in European terms - in the 12th century - who acquired some political recognition three centuries later from Sweden, who developed a sense of national identity only in the last century and statehood in this century, military history is national history.

On a taxi ride across Mannerheim Street, there was an explosion in a deep excavation where workers were dynamiting the blackstreaked pink granite rockbed for an underground passageway. A large chunk of rock fell on a car ahead of us, crushing its hood. Without batting an eye the driver turned and said, "Bad luck, but he will collect insurance." The evenness of his tone gave me the idea that Finns take explosions in stride as a part of everyday life, which might explain why they seem so comfortable with their military past.

F or a relatively peaceful change, the visitor may choose the National Museum of Finland, a block and a half north of the stolid granite Parliament building on Mannerheim Street, a main artery leading to the center of the city. It is a smorgasbord of a structure designed in 1902 by three Finnish architects in what was called the national romantic style meaning that every gnart and curlicue of local vintage, along with neoclassical nonsense, has been incorporated. Inside it is a straightforward museum.

The visitor learns that, following the Ice Age and entering the Stone Age, about 9,000 years ago. humans began habitation in Finland. A thousand years later, judging by relics on dis-play, the inhabitants were making rather elaborate fishnets. In any case fish remains the staple of the Finnish diet today.

Autochthonous forefathers of the presentday Finns are presumed to have appeared about the time Jesus was born, those of Finno-Ugrian origin perhaps in the vicinity of the Ural Mountains having migrated earlier to the lower Baltic seacoast. Archaeological finds have been facilitated by the fact that Finland as a whole is rising at a relatively swift pace, so that former harbor slips and early coastal settlements now lie well above sea level.

Aside from the prehistoric fishmer, National Museum exhibits that impressed me were a chimneyless and windowless farmer's cabin from the early 19th century, its wood darkened by smoke; typically rough-hewn Finnish din-ing tables that were deliberately slanted toward the lower end, as if to carry any spilled drinks or viands into the laps of lesser guests; a miniature portrait of Peter the Great of Russia who had pushed back Swedish-Finnish from tiers already in the 18th century, and a costume of a Finnish peasant woman with a sheathed dagger on a chain across her bosom.

"The dagger is characteristic of all Finnish women's costumes," said the museum guide." "Where is your dagger?" I inquired:
"I left it in the office," she replied, with a

Gaudi's Fantastic Imprint On Barcelona's Architecture

by Roger Browning

ARCELONA — In 1926, the Spanish architect Autonio Gaudi was knocked down by a streetcar and killed. He left behind a surreal, unfinished church that he had started in 1884 and to which be entirely devoted the last eight years

Work on the Sagrada Familia, or Church of the Holy Family, was resumed in 1940. But Gaudi, whose ideas continually evolved during the construction, left no fixed plans, although work continues, the church remains a building without a middle. Nevertheless, it is Barcelona's major tourist attraction, and to many people the Sagrada Familia is Gaudi.

But everything that is fantastic about the church, its busy baroque form, its extraordinarily bright ceramic decoration, is also true of the rest of his work. In his determination to get away from the classical. Gaudi created a unique, instantly recognizable style. It tends to elicit admiration or outrage, but never indiffer-

Gaudi developed a number of styles, from a Moorish effect in his early years, through experiments with Gothic and Baroque, to a type of structure that he called equilibrated, designed to stand on its own without internal bracing or external buttressing. After the turn of the century, his designs are personal state-ments that dely conventional description, but the overall feel puts them in the contemporary catch-all style known as Art Nouveau or, in Spain, Modernista

Antonio Gaudi y Cornet was born in 1852 in or near the Catalan city of Reus. His father, grandfather and great-grandfather were potters. His buildings were often influenced by the mountainous and maritime character of Catalonia, and he is said to have been greatly influenced in his architecture by the plastic possibilities of pottery making.

A visitor to Barcelona in search of Gaudi might start in the Ciudadela Park, close to the port. Here the young Gaudi, having finished his studies, collaborated on the monumental fountain and other details, though his influence was none too obvious to this observer. The trail warms up in the Plaza Real, just off the Ramblas, where the iron street lamps are all his own work. Wrought iron work is a constant Gaudi scature.

But for a real introduction to the typically Gaudiesque, the searcher could start on the other side of the Ramblas, at the Güell Palace on the Conde del Asalto. On the approach, look for the brightly ornamented chimneys that are said to have surprised Picasso so much on his comings and goings to his studio in the same street. The palace, built between 1886 and 1891 as a town house for a wealthy count, is now a museum of the theater, and open to the public.

The street is narrow and the buildings tightly squeezed in. To obtain the magnificence of a palace, Gaudi relied on an inward-looking aspect, concentrating a huge variety of detail in such things as roofs, doors and windows around a courtyard with a starred dome. There are, for instance, more than 40 types of column

A brisk walk north along the Rambias, across the Plaza Cataluña and along the Paseo de Gracia will bring you to the Casa Batlló, built 1904-1906. You cannot miss it. It is the house on the left with a roof like a dragon's spine and balconies like a highway robber's mask. And yet in the delicacy of the columns and curved outlines of the windows, Gaudi achieved a lightness of touch seldom seen in a city street. The house is not open to the public, and so the marvelous aspect of the first-floor windows, the carved bannisters, the blue-tiled courtyard and the arched corridors are the exclusive privilege of the people who live and

A little further along on the other side of the street is the Casa Milá (1906-1910), also known as La Pedrera, a huge, rather dark apartment block, lightened by the flowing curves that Gaudi used to get away from the rigid straight lines of urban architecture. From a distance can be seen the menacing booded figures that serve as chimneys and, close up, the magnificent wrought iron work of the balconies and the main entrance gate. What cannot be seen, because the Casa Milá, too, is not open to the general public, is the detail of the interior, the sweep of the terrace and the decoration of the Abandon the Casa Milà, as Gaudi did before it was finished, leaving it to be adulterated by other hands, and take the Metro north to Lesseps. North again through winding streets is the Guell Park. It was to have been a residential garden suburb, a modernist vision of the urban environment. With only two plots sold. one to Gaudi himself, the project flopped. The views that were to be the preserve of the householders are now everyone's. The park is open to the public.

The large square that was to have been a market, a theater and a recreation center is ceramic decorations of the snaking bench and roof of the colonnade. Here you might take a workman sit on a layer of plaster to produce the exact profile he needed to finish off the bench, In this park, also, is the Gaudi museum containing, notably, some fine furniture. Before leaving, look out toward the sea and pick out the spires of the Sagrada Familia.

As he worked on the church commissioned in 1883. Gaudi became increasingly pious. About 1910, he abandoned nearly all other work and eventually went to live in his work-

Gaudi meant the Sagrada Familia to domi-nate the Barcelona skyline. Modern buildings have destroyed that aim, but the cathedral is still an impressive sight. Approached from be-hind the buildings on the Avenue Diagonal, it can be something of a shock at first sight. Its spiral spires owe nothing to traditional church architecture. They are topped with words of praise in huge lettering and bright crosses em-bedded with ceramics.

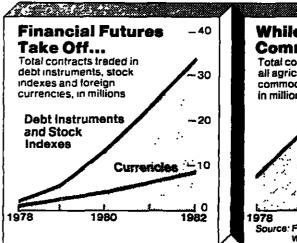

Go inside - the church is open during working hours - and climb around in the towers, looking down and outward to appreciare the detail of the stonework. Compare the baroque exterior of the Nativity Facade, with its clusters of sculpted figures, to the clean lines of the inner face. This is thought by many to be Gaudi's crowning achievement. It was certainly his last. The towers with their multicolored tips that top the facade are the last thing that

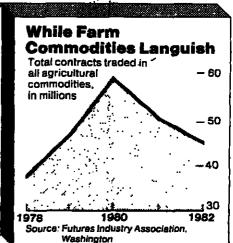

For the cognoscenti, there are many more buildings by Gaudi to be seen in Barcelona and the surrounding area. But the amateur, armed with a sense of the Gaudiesque, might be content with spotting indications of Gaudi or his influence in the architecture, and particularly the wrought-iron work, around Barcelo-

Benches in Güell Park.

New 8mm Video-Recorder Format Expected to Gain Support Slowly

DARIS — When Eastman Kodak announced plans recently to market an 8mm (slightly more than %-inch) videocassette camera-recorder in one portable unit, other consumer-electronics companies rushed to show that they, too, had an 8mm product waiting in the wings.

Many industry watchers have predicted that a move to the 8mm videotape standard would herald the end of Betamax, VHS and V2000, the incompatible 4-inch tape formats currently used for in-home and portable recorders. The new 8mm video systems will be based on an industrywide technical standard established at a meeting of 128 electron-commercial laims.

"Yes, it is the first step toward Kodak and General Electric announced two weeks ago that they will have arrivanced 160%. Some "special fit and remained product, and Philips and Sanyo are expected to market their own 8mm camera-recorders makes them less cumbersome than present systems. But even more important, they present an opportunity for VCR makers to introduce an industrywide standard. The standard defines such specifications as tape speed and recorder-head size, so that tapes recorded on one maker's system can be played back on that of another.

Played back on that of another.

Many industry analysts say that the increased portability and the standarization assure 8mm's eventual success. "If 8mm manages to overcome technical questions, I believe it will includably supplant existing systems," said Jean-Pierre Jannes, a French banking economist

Nonetheless, industry officials and analysts expect the move to 8mm to take place slowly. Many predict that the principal obstacle impeding 8mm video's advance will be manufacturers' reluctance to promote it.

Among the ½-inch formats the Matsushita-developed VHS format has made steady gains in the last few months, over Sony's Betamax system and the V2000 system developed jointly by the Netherland's Philips and West Germany's Grundig. The Betamax camp has been depleted by the defections of Toshiba and NEC of Japan and Zenith of the United States, #### all of which plan to make VHS-based recorders. Philips and Grundig announced that they will make VHS systems for sale outside Europe. VBS Pre-Eminent

According to most estimates, VHS now accounts for 65 to 75 percent of world VCR sales. This pre-eminence of the VHS system is expected to reinforce the reluctance of Matsushita and its 52-percent-owned affiliate, -IVC, to see the 8mm standard appear on the market for in-home recorders. IVC announced Wednesday that it plans to market a VHS camera-recorder later this year.

"We do not think that the ½-inch format will be replaced by the [8mm] standard," said Ken Shimba, a spokeman for Matsushita in the United States. "I think that VHS is becoming the de facto standard."

Other companies that sell VHS systems, such as GE and France's Thomson-Brandt, agree. "That 8mm is the product of the future is one thing," said François Leverve, a spokesman at Thomson, "but VHS still hand a species and dark aband."

Despite their shrinking market share, Sony and Philips also seem to prefer to maintain the technical status quo. Sony introduced a portable camera-recorder last May that uses the %-inch Betamax format. "The current format is being developed to a further stage," said Peter Greatorex, a spokesman for Sony in London.

Makers say that before an 8mm VCR can be marketed as an in-home recorder, prerecorded movies will have to become available on 8mm cassettes and the current playing times of 8mm tapes will have to be extended. And the image quality of the 8mm devices must still be proven to be at least as good as that of existing recorders.

But these technical problems are considered minor and easy to solve—"just dotting the i's and crossing the i's," said Mr. Greatorex.

How quickly they are resolved may depend on consumer reaction to the new camera-recorders and manufacturers' future readiness to promote the 8mm standard. Even its strongest advocates do not expect to see the 8mm format appearing on the in-home VCR market for at least two to the 8mm format appearing on the in-home VCR market for at least two to three years, and they do not expect 8mm to replace 1/2-inch tapes before the end of the decade.

Judge Bars Getty Pact For 4 Days

LOS ANGELES — Attorneys for three grandchildren of the late J. Paul Getty have won a court order delaying Getty Oil Co.'s record 599-billion merger with Tex-

Superior Court Judge Richard P. Byrne issued the order Wednesday, blocking the completion of the merger at least until a court hearing Monday.

The petition to delay the merger was filed by the guardian for Ste-fanie Marie, Cecile Karen Margari-ta and Christina Terese Getty, daughters of Jean Ronald Getty, the oldest surviving son of J. Paul

The delay was sought on the grounds that the Texaco merger would violate terms of the document that established the main family trust, and that a rival offer from Pennzoil Co. could be more beneficial to the three petitioners.

The court order prevents Gordon P. Getty — a brother of Jean Ronald and the sole trustee of the Sarah C. Getty Trust, which holds 40.2 percent of Getty Oil's stock from "consummating or in any way altering" the trust's agreement to sell its 31.8 million Getty Oil shares

That agreement is part of Texaco's proposal to buy 100 percent of Getty Oil's stock for $125 a share. or a total of $9.9 billion. The overall price makes the proposed take-over, announced Jan. 7, the most expensive in history.

Pennzoil had offered to buy up to 20 percent of Getty Oil's stock for $100 a share. It later won a preliminary agreement from Getty Oil and Gordon Getty to convert the company to a private entity, with Penazoil paying $110 a share for 43 percent of the stock. The remaining 57 percent was to be owned by the trust. That agreement fell through when Texaco entered

Pennzoil announced Wednesday, that it was prepared to in-crease its offer to $125 a share for 30 percent of Getty Oil's stock, but added that it would do so only if Texaco withdrew its offer or was legally prevented from completing the merger, or if Gordon Getty was legally barred from selling the Get-

Apple Pins Its Hopes On New Macintosh

By Andrew Pollack

LOS ANGELES — Apple Computer Inc. hopes to dazzle the computer world with its new Macintosh, only a year after pinning its hopes on Lisa, which turned out to be a poor seller.

The new machine will be introduced at the company's annual meeting Tuesday. It is Apple's third and probably last chance to reduce its dependence on the seven-year-old Apple II line amid stiff competition from International Business Machines Corp.

Macintosh, expected to sell for $2,500, is only part of Apple's strategy. The company is also announcing newer, faster versions of its Lisa with an entry price as low as $3,500. It is also expected to announce two new versions of its Apple IIe.

This will be Apple's strongest thrust in years, and many think it will succeed. "They are now putting themselves in contention to be a serious contender in the office environment," said Anthony Morris of Morris Decision Systems, a New York computer dealer.

Apple had a number of setbacks in 1983 after several years of breakneck growth. IBM, which entered the personal-computer business in 1981, quickly surged to the lead in terms of revenues and significance. Apple actually sold more computers than IBM did last /ear - but at a lower price as IBM forced Apple out of the profitable office market and into the home and educational markets.

Apple had no mainstream office computer with which to respond, ince its Apple III had never caught on, and the Lisa, priced initially at $10,000, was too expensive.

Meanwhile, Apple's earnings plunged. The company earned only $5.1 million in the quarter ended last Sept. 30. That was 73 percent below the level of a year earlier. John Sculley, Apple's president and chief executive officer, who was hired from Pepsico last spring, has

Despite Apple's woes, however, industry analysts think its new product line can at least consolidate the company's position as No. 2 in the personal-computer business behind IBM. "I think the market needs an alternative to IBM," said James preliminary vote, decided Thursday to delay to as late as June 1985 new long-distance "access" charges for residential and small-business telephone customers.

The commission also ruled that the flat monthly charges, which had been scheduled to start April 3 at $2 a month should be phased in gradually until 1990 and should go no higher than $4.

The FCC, which has been under considerable public and congressional pressure to delay or scrap the new charges, agreed to meet Wednesday to issue a final ruling on the decision.

Jack D. Smith, head of the agency's Common Carrier Bureau, said that the FCC expects to complete its study of the charges by Dec. 1 but that they might not be imposed until late spring or summer next year, perhaps as late as June 1985, because of required procedures.

While delaying the added charge to individuals and small businesses will save customers some money the FCC's chairman, Mark S Fowler, said the action would reduce or eliminate the $1.75-billion decrease in long-distance phone rates that AT&T had planned on, a development Mr. Fowler called most unfortunate."

Under the plan tentatively idopted, the access charges of $6 a line that business customers will pay for their book-up to long-distance services would go into effect April 3 as scheduled.

The commission decided that long-distance services that are in competition with AT&T, such as MCI and Sprint, would get a 55-percent discount for their connections to local lines, sharply higher than the 20 to 25 percent initially planned by the FCC.

The discount would continue until the quality of the competing companies' connections was im-proved to equal AT&T's. The FCC move was related to recommendations in a letter to the commission Wednesday from Senator Robert J. Dole, Republican of Kansas, and 31 other senators, mostly Republicans. Mr. Smith said the agency's position was "not inconsistent" with proposals outlined by the senators.

Communications Commission, in a governments and regulatory agencies. Congress and businesses. It said it needed time to assess the effect of the AT&T divestiture on telephone service.

The senators' letter, in addition to saying that the flat monthly ac-cess fee should be delayed until 1985, recommended that if the commission decided that access charges "should be ordered sometime during this decade, they be capped at a maximum of $4 and that small rural [telephone] companies be exempt from the order due to the high cost of those opera-tions." Mr. Dole said. The senators also proposed a change in the discounted rates paid by competing long-distance com-panies for their connections to local lines, which are of lesser quality than AT&Ts. The letter said a charge based on actual minutes used, without a substantial reduction of the discount, should be Senator Robert Packwood, Re-

The proposals in the letter, which Mr. Dole called "a reasonable compromise," represent a major weakening in support for such a moratorium.

Only three other members of the commerce committee signed the Dole letter — Barry M. Goldwater, Republican of Arizona; Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, and Paul S. Trible Jr., Republican of Virginia.

The cap we propose and the exemption for small, rural companies provide far more protection at the end of the moratorium than the legislation pending in the Senate." Mr. Dole said.

Bush Vows U.S. to Resist Protectionist Pressures

By Stuart Auerbach

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush pledged Thurs-day that the Reagan administration ld continue to resist pressures for more trade protection, which he said "are mounting" as a result of policies being pushed by Demo-cratic presidential candidates.

But he also acknowledged in answer to a question that President Ronald Reagan granted additional protection to the U.S. textile industry last month because of a commitment "made in our campaign for re-election four years ago."

"We have some areas where we are something less than pure in terms of free trade. Textiles is one of them," Mr. Bush said in the keynote address to a conference on Economic Interdependence and the future of World Trade spon-sored by the International Herald Tribune and Trade Net, a private advocacy group working to further free trade objectives.

He suggested that Mr. Reagan, who overruled most of his key advisers in making the decision to further curb textile imports, might impose greater restriction in order to keep his campaign pledge to pro-tect U.S. markets from increasing imports of foreign textiles.

William A. Niskanen Jr., a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers who opposed ports, told the conference's luncheon session that the industry demanded the protection despite increased sales last year.

"Good times apparently do not tion," said Mr. Niskanen, one of the leading free-trade advocates in the White House. While defending administration moves to protect the U.S. textile industry, Mr. Bush attacked "some who want to replace President Reagan" - his euphemism for the Democrats - for pushing laborsupported domestic content legislation designed to limit imports of mese cars to the United States. The bill passed the House of Representatives last year and is due to come before the Senate this year.

That is not the right course, but in an election year it is the popular course," he said. The election-year "siren's call for protectionism" appears to be going on despite the economic recovery especially the increase in employ ment, that Mr. Bush said should "diminish the temptation" to install barriers to free trade, especially in Congress.

Mr. Niskanen, admitting he spoke with the security of a tenured professor on loan to the White House, called 1984 a "most dangerous" year for free trade as a growing number of U.S. industries are preparing unfair-trade cases so they will come up for a presidential (Continued on Page 11, Col. 3)

Foundation Sells Off 19 Properties In New York for Total of $400 Million

CHICAGO (AP)—The MacArthur Foundation has sold 19 properties in New York City, including the 42-story Gulf & Western Building, in a $400-million transaction described as the largest single commercial realestate purchase ever completed.

The properties were sold Wednesday to First Winthrop Corp. of Boston to comply with a 1969 federal law requiring foundations to divest rhemselves of excess business holdings, officials announced.

The MacArthur Foundation, one of the 10 wealthiest private philan-thropic organizations in the United States, is known for the fellowships it gives without conditions to "exceptionally talented individuals." The federal law was designed to prevent abuse of foundations' tax-exempt status and restricts ownership of more than 20 percent of any

The purchase totals nearly 5 million square feet (450,000 square meters) of commercial space in Manhattan, including buildings on Park Avenue, Broadway, Madison Avenue and Fifth Avenue. ## Trusthouse Forte Posts Record Profit

LONDON (AP) - Trusthouse Force PLC, Britain's largest hotel and catering group, which owns the Travel odge and Excelsior hotel chains in the United States, said Thursday its profit in the year ended Oct. 31 rose 32 percent to a record £62 million ($87.4 million), from £46.8 million the Revenue rose 10 percent to £1.01 billion from £915.4 million in 1982.

Pre-tax trading profit rose to £134.8 million from £111.8 million. All divisions; particularly hotels, contributed to the record results, Trusthouse said. Hotel operations in Britain had profit of £50.7 million up from £41.7 million, while hotel operations in the United States earned £12.5 million, up from £8.8 million a year earlier.

Caterpillar Narrows 4th-Quarter Loss

PEORIA, Illinois (AP) — Caterpillar Tractor Co. says it sharply narrowed its fourth-quarter loss, and said that if special charges were excluded, it would have posted a slight profit.

Despite the improved result, the heavy equipment maker wound up with a record loss of $345 million for the entire year. In 1982, it reported a $180-million loss. The company said 1983 sales totaled $5.42 billion. down from $6.27 billion a year earlier, as a result of depressed economic conditions worldwide

A $15-million charge, associated with the planned closing of three plants, contributed to a $11-million loss in the final quarter, but sales increased to $1.77 billion from $960 million a year earlier, Caterpillar said Wednesday. The company had a fourth-quarter loss of $204 million in the

Chris-Craft Buys 19% of Warner

NEW YORK (NYT) - The battle for control of Warner Communications Inc. has taken a turn against Rupert Murdoch, the Australian publishing magnate, with Chris-Craft Industries Inc.'s announcement that it has acquired 15.2 million shares of a new preferred stock representing about 19 percent of Warner.

The purchase Wednesday, made minutes after the Federal Trade Commission approved the sale, effectively reduced Mr. Murdoch's holding in Warner.

But, almost simultaneously, the FTC approved the application from News International, Mr. Murdoch's holding company, for permission to buy up to 49.9 percent of Warner's stock. Both transactions were subject

Danes Issue Euronote To Raise $500 Million

By Bob Hagerty

LONDON - Denmark is taking points, or hundredths of a percentadvantage of a buoyant market to raise $500 million through an issue of floating-rate notes.

The Danish government plans to use the proceeds of the issue, announced Thursday, to refinance debt taken on earlier at more ex-

Salomon Brothers International won the mandate to act as lead manager for the notes. Market professionals said that eight to 10 banks or groups of banks bid for the lead role. The intense competition reflects banks' desire to lend to top-quality borrowers and may tempt more European countries back into the market.

The notes mature in 20 years, but buyers have the option to redeem after 15. Denmark can call the notes in after four years.

The price is par, or 100, and the interest rate floats at three-sixteenths percentage point over the six-month London interbank offered rate (Libor). Libor Thursday was quoted at 10 percent. Denmark is paying the banks a commission of just five-eighths percent on the

Assuming that the notes are re## deemed after 15 years and including the commission, Denmark is paying a total of about 23 basis age point, above Libor.

The issue demonstrates that banks' profit margins on floaters continue to narrow, Last October, when Denmark raised $500 million, it paid about 39 points over Libor, even though buyers have the option to redeem that issue after just five years.

Rival houses said they were surprised that Salomon offered such "tight" terms. With the commission so low, one trader sneered, "I think they're doing it for love."

Traders reported that the notes changed hands at around 99.25 before Salomon moved in with support buying and nudged the price up to around 99,40. At that level, the issue would be just within the range at which the managers could show profits.

Denmark also tapped the Japanese market Thursday. In Tokyo, Yamaichi Securities Co. announced that it had been chosen as lead manager for 15 billion yen ($64.4 million) of 10-year bonds. The issue carries a 7.7 percent interest coupon and was priced at 99.95, to yield 7.708 percent, Ya-

U.S. Curbs On Textiles Are Assailed

GENEVA — Developing countries backed by Japan and the European Community criticized the United States Thursday for its new controls on textile imports, a spokesman for the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade said.

Textile exporters told a GATT committee that the new U.S. measures aroused "deep concern, uncertainty and disruption." Brazil, Hong Kong, South Korea, Peru, Uruguay, Egypt, Japan, Sri Lanka and China are among the concerned countries, the GATT spokesman said. He said the EC also is concerned that cutbacks in U.S. imports of textiles and clothing will cause Third World suppliers to divert their products to Europe.

The U.S. measures, adopted Dec. 16, enable the United States to control more strictly its imports and to reduce imports from countries violating U.S. quotas. Richard Imus, the U.S. spokesman at the GATT textiles committee, maintained that the new U.S. controls are "an internal government policy adjustment " But he admitted textile imports have become a matter of concern in the United States.

Imports increased 24 percent over 1983 and 50 percent from 1980 to 1983, he said. Developing countries account for 70 percent of the increase.

The GATT textiles committee conitors implementation of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, which regulates the bulk of international trading in textiles. ing markets, and not by enacting

U.S. to Cut Enriched-Uranium Prices

By Milton R. Benjamin

WASHINGTON — The Energy Department has announced that it is offering foreign and domestic utilities lower prices and easier terms on fuel for nuclear-power plants because of a worldwide oversupply of enriched uranium, Energy Secretary Donald P. Ho-del said Wednesday that, with the nuclear-power industry battered by plant cancellations and ever-lower expectations, the market is awash with a "large and growing surplus" of enriched uranium fuel that soon will amount to "a two-year world

Supply.

With much of this surplus being resold at cut-rate prices by utilities at Cut-rate prices by utilities. that no longer need it, Mr. Hodel said, the Energy Department — which does a $2-billion-a-year business selling slightly enriched uranium fuel — is losing customers rapidly to this spot market and to foreign suppliers.

In the last decade the U.S. share of the foreign enrichment market has shrunk from 100 percent to 35

The Energy Department is offering new contracts to all its customers, many of whom had long-term contracts that had years to run at the old rates. The new contracts propose to cut the price slightly to $135, freeze it until Oct. 1, 1985, then link price increases to an in-

The department would also let its customers vary the amount of uranium enriched each year, permitting them to take as little as 70 percent of the amount specified in the contract and fill their remaining needs on the spot market. For three years the spot-market fuel would have to be of U.S. origin. The new contracts would permit a foreign enstomer to terminate its contract without penalty if a U.S. export license were delayed more than two years — a provision that would aid countries such as South Africa, whose fuel has been tied up in the United States because of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act.

Mr. Hodel said he expected most utilities that had contracts with the Energy Department to sign new contracts by the Oct. I deadline. Otherwise they will have to continue paying higher prices under their old contracts.

While the new contracts will run for 30 years, they can be terminated at no cost with 10 years' notice. An Energy Department official said revenues under the new contractual arrangement would proba-

"Our hope is to keep it from continuing to drop," he said. The department turns out slightly enriched uranium, used in civilian reactors, at plants in Tennessee Kentucky and Ohio that were built to provide highly enriched uranium for U.S. nuclear weapons. The plants are operating at 45 percent of capacity.

Ford Werke Lifts Market Share

COLOGNE - Ford-Werke AG said Thursday it expects to consolidate its West German market share in 1984 after increasing it to 12 percent in 1983 from 11.3 percent in 1982.

A spokesman for the Ford Motor Co. unit said delays averaging three months in new model production had prevent ed the company from achieving a market share goal of 12.5 per-cent. He said a 1984 target has not been set, but 12 percent would be "more or less right."

NAVY & EMPIRE

By James L. Stokesbury. 430 pp. $16.95. Morrow, 105 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by C. Northcote Parkinson THREE rather similar books have been I published at about the same time. Of the three the book by Richard Hough is far the best and for two good reasons. In the first place, he has much that is new to say, partly because he stands on the shoulders, as it were, of the late professor Arthur Marder, the preeminent modern naval historian of World War L to all of whose papers he had access. The result is an important narrative to which the publishers have done justice with 41 plates and It maps and diagrams. Nor is the narrative all Hough has to offer. He also includes pen portraits of the main characters — notably Admirals Fisher, Jellicoe, Beatty — and a very well balanced discussion of the more crucial events, particularly the last great ship-to-ship encounter between opposing surface fleets, that of the British Grand Fleet and the Ger-man High Seas Fleet off Jutland in 1916. He is particularly successful in seeing that men of great distinction have failings as well as merits, no one of them being always right. Churchill he says, was "a brilliant peacetime First Lord for the needs of the Royal Navy between 1912 and 1914," even if his letters, or at least one of them could be described by the prime minister. Asquith, as "begotten by froth out of foam." By contrast Hough concludes that "his leadership in war had very lew redeeming features." Many mistakes were due to his "fussing over everyone and everything causing dismay and resentment." In summarizing the case for and against both Jellicoe and Beatty the author is anything but partisan. Churchill, however, who wrote a good deal of nonsense about Judand," very justly described Jellicoe as "the

it's different and it will not only help my event but all Americans." Scott has been living and training in Scottsdale, Arizona, and he is getting ready for the indoor season. He plans to compete in five meets, beginning with the Sunkist Invitational on Friday in Los Angeles. But he won't be going against Ire-land's Eamonn Coghlan, the world indoor mile record-holder. Cogh-lan has a stress fracture of the tibia bone in his right leg and will not compete indoors this season.

Scott has run the second-fastest outdoor mile of all time, 3:47.69, and he's the U.S. indoor mile record-holder at 3:51.8. He is usually second to Coghlan on the boards. He was second in the 1,500 meters to Britain's Steve Cram in the world track championships last August in Helsinki.

Second, Second, Second, It's a frustrating litany for the 27-yearold miler. Scott is aware that being second best in the United States in almost anything gets scant recogni-tion. But he lives with that. What disturbs him is being criticized for running what some writers called a dumb race in losing to Cram at

"It wasn't like I didn't make the finals or that I finished last," Scott said. "I was second by two-tenths of a second [3:41.59 to 3:41.87]. I was so close. How can it be a stupid

Scott's tactics were questioned ly benefited Cram, who has a blaz-ing kick. Said Aouita of Morocco followed by Cram and Scott, Cram passed Aouita going into the final turn with about 200 meters left. But Scott didn't kick precisely when

"Cram went by Aouita and then I came up on Aouita's shoulder," Scott said. "Aouita sped up and Steve Scott, left, finishing second in the 1,500-meter final in Helsinki, waits for a new day against his major competition: Steve Ovett (341), Steve Cram (325) and Said Aouita (549).

But that wasn't the problem. On the backstretch I should have made a charge to go around both of them and, if Cram went with me, I'd at least be on his shoulder in the last

200 meters. "It was a judgment call that I made at that particular second. I because he allowed a slow pace—a felt like we were going quick 65-second first lap—that ultimate—enough and I thought I could reel Cram in on the last home stretch. Cram went around Aouita, but had the lead with 500 meters left, Aquita held me off and the distance opened between myself and Cram. I was gaining on Cram but there was too much ground to make up."

So Scott lost a tactical race, and in many major championship meets, such as the Olympics, a tactical race is the format. Scott wants a faster first lap next summer but held me off. I ran three yards long- he doesn't necessarily want to be er [on the outside] and that was the pace-setter. "I don't want to be his enti-basically the difference at the end. stuck with the lead because, no factor."

matter how fast you go, you're not going to run away from any of those guys," he said.

Scott will undoubtedly have a different race plan for the Olympic 1,500 final. His major competition, he said, will likely come from Cram, Aouita and Ovett, who finished fourth at Helsinki, and possibly Sydney Marce of the United Aouita. "After what he did at Helsinki, he has to be the dark horse in the field. He only recently reached a world-class level."

Marce. "Anything could happen with him. He might not make the finals [such as in Helsinki] or he could get the gold medal. He doesn't know how to reach a peak, or rather he can reach a peak but he can't time it. He runs hard and, all of a sudden, he runs fast. TAMPA, Florida - Jim Plunkett's National Football League career has been one part House of Horrors, one part Fantasy Island.

NHL Canucks Fire Coach Neilson

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Roger Neilson was fired Thursday as head coach of the Vancouver Canucks and replaced behind the bench by General Manager Harry Neale for the balance of the National Hockey League season. Neale said the Canucks had been "underachieving" for the last 1½ years under Neilson. It was the third time Neilson has been fired by an NHL team. He previously was head coach of Toronto and Buffalo. "I'm like a lot of other people," Neilson said after the announcement. "I'm looking for a job."

By Ru. ell Baker
bare bones of the case:

A young woman enters a friedchicken establishment carrying a $10 bill to purchase a small quantity of the house specialty. A young man, whom she knows casually. enters behind her. There is a brief contretemps, the young woman exits to find a policeman, finds two and tells them the young man has snatched her chicken money. The policemen arrest him. He is charged with feloniously stealing the chicken money by forcibly removing it from the young woman's

As a police reporter 35 years ago. I saw justice done in hundreds of such affairs, and it was done with dispatch and efficiency. The cops haled the accused man immediately to police court, where a magistrate listened to both sides of the story. If he believed the woman, he checked with the cops to discover if the young man was a consistently bad actor.

If he was, the magistrate might send him to the hoosegow for 30 days. If he wasn't, the magistrate might give him a brief sentence, suspend it, and talk to him like a Dutch uncle, warning him that another offense would cost him 30 years in stir. Next case!

But stay. Not so swiftly. The course of justice, as I recently discovered at some cost to my digestion and wallet has become more complex since I last idled in police courts. This very case, the case of the snatched chicken money, came to trial in New York recently while my wife was on jury duty.

Sworn to secrecy by the court, she could not reveal the nature of the crime until the case was settled. but confided that the jury selection had taken three days and said the case was apparently complex, since the judge had advised jurors to bring pajamas, toothbrushes and other equipment necessary to survive a long bout of jury deadlock. Naturally, I assumed the case must involve a complicated embezziement scheme, a corporate conspiracy to defraud the public, or homicide, so was not amazed when a bailiff phoned at 8 P.M. on the third day of the trial to inform me that the jury had been locked up for the night in a hotel and that I must make my own dinner.

Previous experience had prepared me for a sleep fraught with nightmare, and I was not disappointed. The following day, aware that it might be weeks before she could again turn her hand to hollandaise and crab gumbo, and determined not to suffer another night of agony, I proposed a restaurant visit with two friends.

Sure enough, the bailiff phoned again to report that the jury had dined and was resuming its deliberations. The restaurant dinner this is New York, remember -cost me $50. All right, I had a drink. Maybe two.

My wife had just arrived home when I returned at 11 P.M. In precise detail, she related the story of the snatched chicken money. She is a woman who likes to have her little joke, so when she finished I said, "Very witty, and now tell me the real story. Was it a kidnapher chicken money. That was the case," she said. "Surely there is more to it than that. When did it happen?"

"Eleven months ago," she said. "But when I was a kid reporter they tried that kind of case two hours after it happened and the judge settled it in 90 seconds."

"Don't blame me because you're getting old," she said. I don't want to be one of those cranks who hate to see an accused man enjoy his day in court, but this incident has shaken my faith in American justice, Faced with a case that could be disposed of within 24 hours, it had taken II months to bring it to trial, three days to pick a iury, two days to record the evidence and two days for the jury to reach a verdict, which turned out to be "petty larceny." It would have made more sense if the state had offered the young woman a $20 bribe and a free box of fried chicken to abandon her complaint. Still, maybe it was worth it for the pleasure it gave my wife, who likes her little joke. She now boasts that, having been locked up for a night by order of the court, she has spent more time in custody than most New York

Cher Trying to Shed Glitter Image

By Janet Maslin New York Times Service

NEW YORK — She sur-prised everyone with her well-received appearance in Robert Altman's film "Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean." Now she has given a supporting performance in Mike Nichols's "Silkwood" that has won her glowing notices. But Cher says she doesn't quite feel like an overnight sensation. Her recent acting successes, she says, were preceded by "eight years in which I couldn't get a job in

When Cher was chosen for her "Silkwood" role as Dolly Pel-liker, the blue-collar, lesbian friend of Meryl Streep as Karen Silkwood, Nichols said it was her vitality, humor and surprising depth" that won her the role.

But according to Nora Ephron, the film's co-screenwriter with Alice Arlen: "It was a very hard part to cast because of all the things Dolly couldn't be. She couldn't be blonde. She couldn't be really beautiful, or it would seem too bizarre to find two really beautiful women working in the middle of Crescent, Oklahoma. And she had to seem young, because the person the part is very loosely based on was only 19 at the time."

By her own account, Cher had wanted to be an actress all along, but ever since she met Sonny Bono and he helped transform her into the glittery, attention-getting creature that is Cher, her image had been distracting. She had long been too visible as a singer, television star and clotheshorse to be taken seriously by those who might have sent acting work her way.

"People always said the same thing, and it was 'Oh, you're too Cher," she recalled. Playing Dolly, the plutonium-plant worker. Cher dressed in pants belonging to a male crew member (he's a size 33; Cher is size 27), flat shoes (boots make her legs look too long) and a baggy T-shirt, with the whole outfit made even uglier by several extra sets of under-

Glamour roles had been among the few parts offered to her in the past. Among the films for which she had previously been man's wife and Cher's mother are considered were "King Kong" ("I was pregnant at the time, or else I probably would have done it, just to work") and "The Fish That Saved Pittsburgh" ("I thought, vou just can't be any good with all the odds against you").

"Most of the time I couldn't even get interviewed for things, not even for TV movies," she said. "And I couldn't find an agent who would handle me for pictures alone. They would agree to take me, but what they really wanted was Las Vegas and that other stuff. And so I'd be with someone for a couple of months, and nothing would happen, and I'd have to move on."

Finally, after watching Linda Ronstadt on stage in "The Pirates of Penzance." Cher decided to pursue an acting career in New York. She knew Lee Strasberg, had decided to take a class with him and was auditioning for Joseph Papp when an opportunity presented itself. Cher's mother telephoned Altman on an unrelated matter (Altfriends), and somehow this led to Cher appearing in "Jimmy Dean." "I got a script on Sunday, and by Tuesday I had a job,"

Nichols and Ephron saw Cher in Altman's stage production of "Jimmy Dean." which preceded the film. "There she was," recalls Ephron. "She was so close to the Dolly part that it was as though was auditioning with the

When Nichols offered her the role, Cher agreed to play it with-out even asking to see a script. which prompted another call from Nichols two weeks later.

"He said, 'I have to tell you something.' " Cher recalled. This is a wonderful part. She's a lesbian, but she's a wonderful lesbian.' I said 'OK, fine, it doesn't bother me.' " "Cher had come to see me for

'Carnal Knowledge,' and I liked her very much but in the end we agreed there was no role for her." Nichols recalled. "Because she is kind of a pop to see her as someone more like way, way down from herself to play Dolly." Cher's inexperience as a screen actress was more than overcome the person she really is. Oddly enough, Dolly is not the person she is at all. We had to bring Cher by her naturalness, according to her "Silkwood" colleagues. The thing she takes absolutely for granted, and the most important element of her gift, is that she's used to having her own life go on in front of an audience and in front of the camera," Nichols said. "That's a big part of her personality, and it unquestionably comes from having been a performer for so long." Nonetheless, so ingenuous was Cher during the filming that, as the movie progessed in sequence and the actors grew more serious, Cher became more and more upset by the material.

"There was a scene toward the end of the film where I had to get up and leave, because I was almost hysterical," Cher said. "It was the scene when the doctors are telling Karen that she's not badly contaminated. I knew the doctors were lying, and Meryl was made up to look like she was going to die. Suddenly, I looked at her and thought: This happened to a real person. And if Meryl were dying I don't think I could stand it.'

At the age of 37, at the start of what may be a new career, Cher is hopeful that "Silkwood" will bring more acting offers, and she's ready to take on different kinds of stage and screen roles.

It remains to be seen whether Cher's simply being Cher will continue to be an occupational obstacle. In any case, such that her reputation for flamboyance is greatly exaggerated. "I don't smoke, I don't drink to speak of, and I don't take drugs at all," she said. "I take care of my two children. I've been married twice, once for 11 years and once for three years. I don't go out with more than one man at a time. But you know what it is? I dress strangely. That's what I do. Maybe people don't understand about that, but it's something I like. I'm certainly not going to

Auction of Turners Fails

Wednesday for two scenes of Venice painted by the British artist J.W.M. Turner, but the owners rejected the bids as too low. Life Friend, a spokeswoman for Christie's in New York, said that the minimum was "confidential — even I don't know it." Friend said $1.4 million was the high bid for "Going to the Ball (San Martino)" and $1.2 million was the high bid for "Returning from the Ball (St. Martha)." She said the paintings will go back to the owners, who

The singer Diana Ross Wednesday donated $250,000 to construct a playground she had promised to build with profits from her raindelayed Central Park concert. Ross was criticized two weeks ago when city officials disclosed the concert last July failed to produce a penny for the promised playground proect, which Ross described as a longtime "dream." The singer pre-sented Mayor Edward Koch with a check. The concert was disrupted by a violent rainstorm and had to be done again the next night. Ross said the rain delay was a major factor in the concert's failure to make money.

Wednesday it cut off power to a home for the retarded and mentally ill, leaving 23 elderly patients shiv-ering in their beds for 11 hours, to collect a $400 overdue bill. "As cruel as it may seem, disconnection is the only way to get the money," said Tom Underwood, office manager for the Appalachian Electric Cooperative. Sheriff Tom Eslinger said he learned about the patients plight and found them crying and cold in the state-licensed Phoenix House Nursing Home's two buildings Tuesday night. "I have no doubt that some of those old people might have died if we had not gotten to them when we did," Eslinger said. "They were wrapped up in everything they owned blankets --- you name it." The utility restored power after Eslinger notified the company's officials. Underwood said the non-profit home's owner, Lorraine Roberson, had failed to pay two months of bills even though utility service men went there three times to try to
